CWA Members Helping Haitian Children

Dear Elizabeth,

One of the things that constantly amazes me about my CWA brothers and sisters is your ability to come through in times of need.

Right now is one of those times.

The relief effort in Haiti is less than two weeks old, and aid workers are racing against time to prevent further loss of life. CWA is partnering with Save the Children to help provide critical supplies to quake survivors -- particularly children, who are most vulnerable.

Help make sure Save the Children has the resources it needs to continue these efforts. Any amount you can afford will help save lives -- click here to make your donation right now and make sure to put CWA in the Company/Organization Name field:

Journalist Tony Winton, president of the News Media Guild, TNG-CWA Local 31222, has been on the ground in Haiti documenting the disaster and the relief effort.

The devastation and suffering in Haiti is beyond words and images. From a people that had next to nothing, the earthquake took everything, with very long odds against the real threats of disease and starvation. A sustained relief effort -- lasting years or decades -- is needed to avoid these, and to give the Haitian people a chance to build a sustainable way of life.

Save the Children has worked continuously in Haiti since 1978, and after last week's earthquake it began an immediate large-scale relief and recovery effort. They are well suited to undertake the kind of sustained relief effort Tony says is needed, but they need our help in order to do that.

Your contribution will help Save the Children deliver food, water, shelter materials, medicines, hygiene kits, and other essentials during the first critical weeks of the post-disaster period.

Then, as conditions allow and children's survival needs are being met, Save the Children will also use your generous gift to initiate and sustain long-term recovery programs that address the health, education, protection and well being of children in Haiti.

Responding to a disaster of this magnitude can seem overwhelming. But with such tremendous need for aid, any support you can provide will make a real difference.

Thank you for stepping up once again for those in need.
